Conductor Notes

The Fighting Race, “a dramatic song”, was composed for voice and piano in 1919 by John Philip Sousa. It was based on the text of a 1911 poem by Joseph I. C. Clarke and was frequently performed by a soprano soloist with Sousa’s Band. The title bore the names of three men prominent in Clarke’s poem, “Kelly, Burke and Shea.”

In 1922 Sousa reworked his orchestration, this time setting it (without words) as a solo for trombone and band. He called his instrumental version The Fighting Race. Sousa’s trombone soloist John Schueler later became a member of the orchestra at the Metropolitan Opera.

Two changes have been made for the trombone version: It is set a half step higher. After the introduction, the verse and chorus are repeated by way of a first and second ending. For additional variety during the second repeat, “Second time, slightly faster with more assurance” found in the piano/vocal edition has been added to this version.

This modern edition was created from manuscript parts from the Sousa Band library. Since only nine instrumental parts remain from the trombone solo orchestration for band, the remaining parts have been reconstructed and adapted from Sousa’s vocal arrangement. Numerous inconsistencies have been clarified. Beginning in measure 59 in either the score or parts, no articulations were given for the triplets. To create an enthusiastic concluding allegro, and to allow greater facility, it is suggested these articulations could be slurred. Performance time c. 3:00.

About the Arranger

David Stern has taught music at all levels, elementary through college. He holds the BME from the University of Colorado, and MM and PhD from Texas Tech University. In addition to a career as a band director, he maintains a very active schedule as a low brass performer and currently serves as an associate editor for the International Trombone Association Journal.
